Election preview

A PLAGUE ON ALL THEIR HOUSES!

THE NEXT GENERAL ELECTION may come this Autumn or, much more probably, in Spring or early Summer of 1992. The decision as to the timing, which will be made by Prime Minister John Major, will depend entirely on when the Tory Government views its best chance of winning.

But whenever the election comes, the situation will be the same: for the British people it will be a matter of Hobson's choice.

For the policies offered by the three main parties of Westminster — Tories, Labour and Liberal Democrat — are quite pathetic. Equally pathetic is the record of the Tories and Labour in government since 1945. They have thrown away an empire. They have reduced British industry to ruin. They have allowed our country to be flooded with immigrants from the Third World. They have made Britain a crime-infested slum.

So when these three parties come running to us for our votes on polling day, whenever that is, there is only one possible response they deserve, and it is this:-

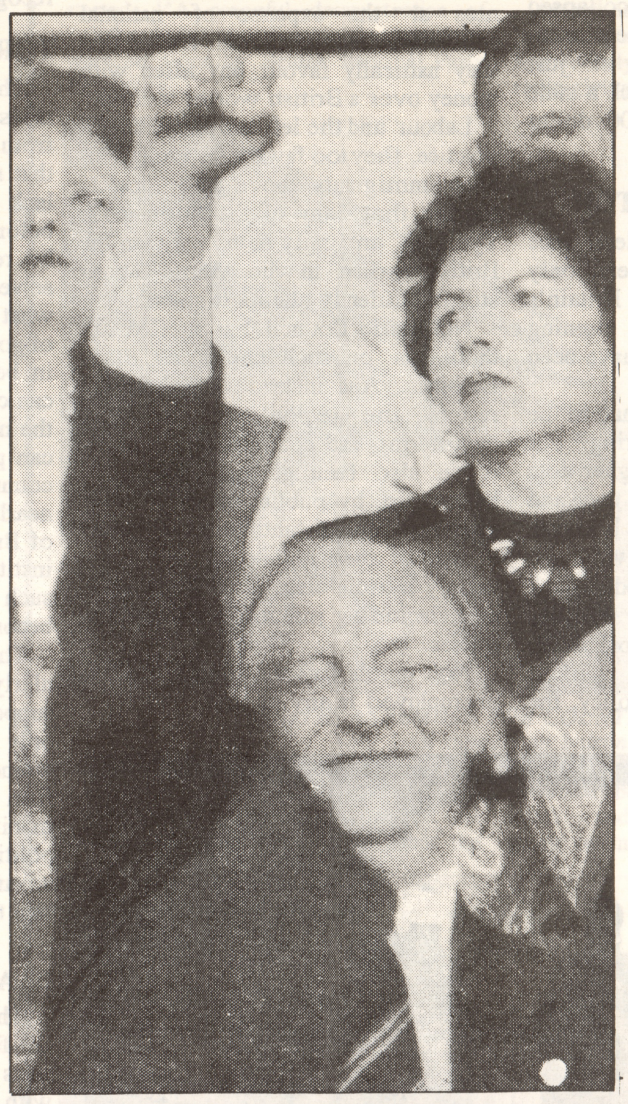
A PLAGUE ON ALL THEIR HOUSES!

A plague on the Tories, who have wrecked most of what was left of British manufacturing industry when they took over in 1979, who have surrendered to the EC bureaucrats much of our power to make our own laws and who have let Britain slide into anarchy.

A plague on Labour, who want to bring even more immigrants in, whose far-left local councils have made many British towns and cities into mini-Soviet republics and whose leader is a posturing buffoon.

And a plague on the Liberal Democrats, who believe in a Federal Europe and who want to lower the age of consent for queers to 16!

Is there an alternative? Yes. But we must be prepared for real radical change — not only a change of party but a change of system. Read about that alternative in this issue.



NO-HOPERS

These are Britain's choices for Prime Minister at the next election: John Major (left), Neil Kinnock (centre — does the salute indicate where his sympathies lie?) and Paddy Ashdown (right). Whoever gets the job, there's no prospect that the nation will be led out of the appalling mess in which it's been landed. They're all no-hopers, doomed to fail.

MIND BRITAIN'S BUSINESS!

HERE IN BRITAIN it has been a busy month for those who see it as their divinely appointed mission to put the world to rights. The media have resumed their angry broadsides against Saddam Hussein in Iraq. There has been an impassioned debate on what we should do about Yugoslavia. And in the meantime Prime Minister Major has been enjoying himself hugely hopping across three continents visiting world leaders and, in two out of the three cases, delivering to them schoolmasterly lectures on how they should run their affairs.

In the first case, Mr. Major landed in Moscow and met Messrs. Gorbachev and Yeltsin, telling them that they must show faster progress towards 'democracy' in the Soviet Union before fully qualifying for his approval and his assistance. Then, flushed with this display of self-righteousness, our John flew east, first stopping in Hong Kong to have himself photographed, with his best 'caring' look, in the company of Vietnamese refugee children, then arriving in Peking, where he promptly violated all the traditions of diplomatic protocol by reading the riot act to his hosts over the matter of 'human rights' in Red China, with particular reference to the Tiananmen Square incident of 1989.

Meanwhile, back here in Britain unemployment was continuing to spiral upwards, and massive outbreaks of public disorder were occurring, first in Oxford and shortly afterwards in North Shields and Newcastle. These developments were of course mere passing symptoms of a country that is falling to pieces through economic stagnation, crime and immorality and pathetic misgovernment.

So how does it come about that Mr. Major has the time to go swanning around the world putting other nations' affairs in order while his own nation's affairs are in such chronic disorder? There is a simple explanation.

Our Premier was acting out the time-honoured trick beloved of party politicians in the 'democracies' of strutting around striking the poses of international 'statesman' in order to boost his image with his own people and distract them from their manifold grievances and miseries. Mr. Major, as everyone knows, has an election coming up in the not so distant future — an election which he is by no means sure of winning. If the British people are allowed to focus their minds clearly on the abominable mess that the Tories have made of Britain over the past 12 years, it is probable that when polling day comes they will give this Government the boot. Some method must therefore be found to divert their attentions elsewhere. Hence the wanderings and posturings of the galloping Major abroad, telling everyone what to do.

Well, we think it's time all this nonsense stopped.

It's time that our leaders and our self-appointed 'thinkers' of the press abandoned their game of sorting out the affairs of other nations and applied themselves single-mindedly to the task of bringing some order to the affairs of this country.

It's time, in other words, that we minded Britain's business and let others get on with their business.

Britain falling apart

BEHIND LATEST RIOTS LIES DEEP NATIONAL SICKNESS TO WHICH POLITICIANS HAVE NO ANSWER

BRITAIN has been engaging in agonies of self-analysis in the weeks following the outbreaks of rioting which convulsed Oxford, Cardiff, North Shields and Newcastle-upon-Tyne in the earlier part of September. Quite clearly, the behaviour of the rioters, put together with many other displays of yobbishness seen over recent years and with the rocketing crime rate, is indicative of a deep national sickness. The big questions are: what sickness? And what cure?

In part, the disturbances were pure hooliganism — especially in the north east, where there has been some evidence that they were pre-planned and organised with a sophistication that belied the moronic image given to them, and that behind this planning and organisation there may be a political motive. But be this as it may, those responsible must nevertheless have had a ready army of discontents at their disposal. Just how we are breeding so many of these discontents is the big question which everyone is asking.

Dr. George Carey, the Archbishop of Canterbury, came out with the predictable noises we are now so used to hearing from the clerical left: he blamed it all on poverty and unemployment. But conditions in South Wales and Tyneside were far worse in the 1930s, and no riots of the kind happened then.

At the other extreme, the Government and the Tory press have wanted to place the blame entirely on the youngsters themselves, whom they have taken to task for their fecklessness and lack of discipline. But the past record of both Geordies and Welshmen shows that neither are naturally that way at all, any more than their record shows them to be natural rioters. What is more, if discipline has collapsed among our youth it would seem much more appropriate, instead of just deploring and denouncing such a state of affairs, to ask the 64,000 dollar question: why?

ROT STARTS AT THE TOP

The truth is that, as Napoleon once said, there are no bad soldiers, only bad officers; and the way that Britain's national leaders have been running things for many years might have been calculated to ruin its people.

To a much greater extent than in the thirties, and despite offering our unemployed youth a much higher dole than their grandfathers ever got, and general expectations of a much higher standard of living for those in work, all Britain's politicians have acted in such a way as could give anyone the idea that they are in some sort of conspiracy to trash the British worker.

As a matter of deliberate policy, the Tories have allowed the native industries of both South Wales and Tyneside to be wiped out by foreign, largely Japanese, competition. Almost as if to rub both areas' noses in the dirt, the Government has then begged and bribed Jap businessmen, with big subsidies never made available to British firms, to set up a few odd workshops around both regions. Hence the presence of Nissan in the North East and Sony in South Wales. If a local youngster grovels enough, he might be in line to be taken on as a coolie for a few years at the whim of the new Jap lord of the manor.

In the meantime, a large part of what was left of the local distributive trade in such depressed regions has been taken over almost lock,stock and barrel at knock-down prices by Indians, Pakistanis and Bangladeshis. Aliens such as these are seen to thrive whilst native young Britons are abandoned to kick their heels on the dole in boredom and futility.

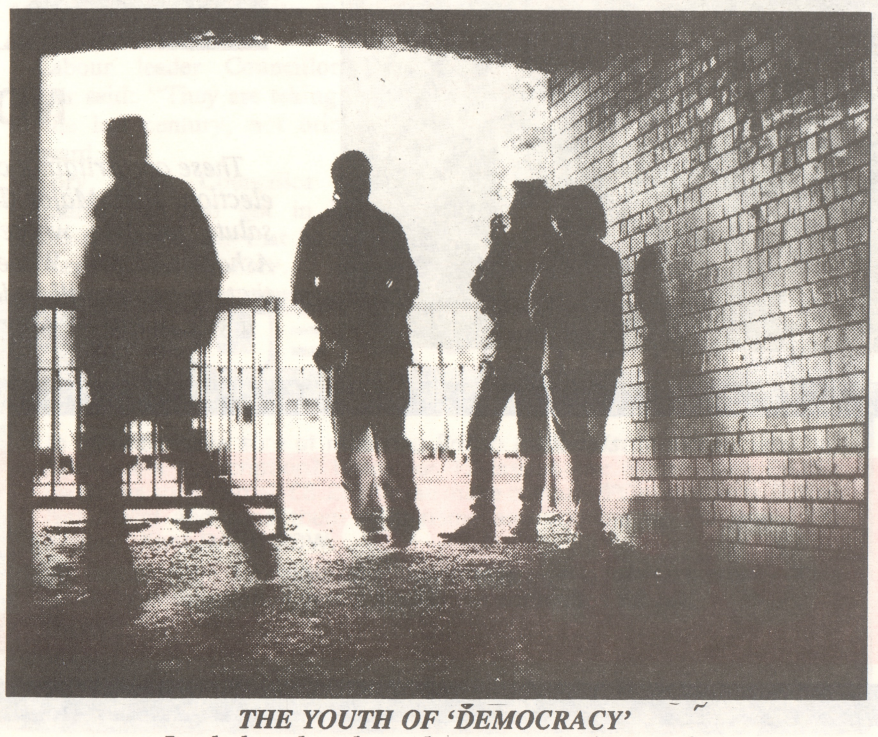
NO SENSE OF PURPOSE

But this is not all. In the meantime, nobody acts to give these young people any sort of faith or idealism, any new sense of direction or purpose which could serve as a foundation on which to build a new authority and discipline in their lives. The Tories preach only money-grubbing and individual selfishness at the expense of national solidarity. In practice, this means that they naturally favour any alien with money over a British worker without.

Labour and the left are no better. In practice, they too favour the welfare of alien immigrants above all — despite the fact that many of the latter, as in Tyneside, are vastly better off than the British workers in whose name Labour still fraudulently claims to speak.

Newcastle Council has shelled out thousands on such causes as Black Lesbians. And instead of fighting to restore the region's shipbuilding, engineering and coalmining industries it has also been giving its support, backed up by public money, to the activities of local 'anti-racist' agitators — most of them anti-social, left-wing, mainly middle class student degenerates, including junkies, squatters and queers.

Not much for the young British unemployed in any of this.



THE YOUTH OF 'DEMOCRACY'
Leaderless, bored, nowhere to go, nothing to do

Back in the 1930s, however atrociously many of them were treated in material terms, British workers didn't see their neighbourhoods put up for grabs to aliens. Nor were they told that they were the inferiors of those aliens, a mass of proles fit only to be merged into a mixed-breed one-world humanity. Quite the contrary, they were permitted to retain some element of national pride, and thus have some recognisable standards to live up to.

NORTH SHIELDS IN FLAMES
Yes, the rioters are deprived all right — deprived of leadership and of ideals in which to believe

TORIES PASSING THE BUCK

The correspondence columns of our newspapers are littered with letters from shire Tories deploring the fact that so many British youngsters today lack any respect for 'authority'. But before those representing authority can be respected they must prove themselves worthy of such respect. Just what single figure is there in the ranks of government or opposition today who in bearing, example and achievement can command that sort of esteem from the mass of people? And how on earth can politicians who have reduced this country to a shambles and ruined very nearly everything in it expect the youth of Britain to treat either them or their institutions with any kind of reverence, such as is required if the country is to become law-abiding?

The people of this country, particularly the young, look at their supposed 'leaders' and they can see only little men (and occasionally women) clearly on the make, with no firm principles or strong ideals, and manifestly interested in using the political process solely for their own advancement and, in many cases, to line their own pockets.

BLAME FOR IMMORALITY

The same shire Tories will lament the fact that there are so many youngsters roaming our streets nowadays with little concept of morality, little sense of right and wrong. But just where are these youngsters expected to pick up any firm ideas of what is right and what is wrong? From the schoolroom, where they are likely to come under the tutelage of a trendy, lefty teacher who regards morality as 'old hat'? From television, where every day and every night a stream of poison spews forth, glorifying criminality, buggery and violence, scoffing and social and marital responsibility and institutionalising illegitimacy and abortion? From the church, where the clergy are far too busy meddling in the affairs of South Africa and the 'Third World' to have any time for the moral welfare of their own parisioners?

Yet those shire Tories and others who rue the collapse of moral standards everywhere will not even begin to consider that it might be the responsbility of government — their Conservative Government — to take action to root the poison out of these powerful institutions by purging the schools, the media and the church of those who so clearly have been misusing them for evil purposes.

CRUSHED PEOPLE

A recent writer in The Spectator magazine, Theodore Dalrymple, in an effort to analyse the national malaise that produced the recent urban disorders, made this very interesting observation:;

> "Whenever my foreign friends come to this country, they are struck — even if they come from countries much poorer than Britain — by two things about the British: the first is their crushed and defeated demeanour, the second the extreme ugliness of their lives..."

"Crushed and defeated demeanour" can only be demonstrated by a people that has lost all sense of pride — personal, national and racial — and has been given virtually nothing to hope for and nothing to believe in. And if we have reached this unhappy state of affairs in a country whose people in past ages have astounded the world with their deeds and their achievements, culminating in the creation of the greatest empire in history, it can only mean that it is a country at present utterly bereft of leadership and wholly lacking in worthy ideals to provide the cement whereby its people may be bound together in common loyalty and unified endeavour.

That means very simply a country that is ripe for revolutionary change — indeed which must undergo revolutionary change if it is to have any future at all.

The first ingredient of such a change must be the creation of a spirit of nationalism — making for the restoration of a sense of national pride: a feeling that to be born British is a privilege and an honour, and thereby something which imposes on the individual certain duties and responsibilities.

The second is the restoration of genuine authority — an authority which will not content itself with mere pious sermons against wrongdoers but which will take all necessary active steps to eliminate the influences making for evil and lawlessness in the country, having in the meantime by its own achievements of national reconstruction established a claim to be respected by the whole populace.

As things are, Britain is falling apart. It is going to take an iron hand to put it back together.

Who now speaks for the British?

THE Commission for Racial Equality, which wants a new souped-up race act to crush British folk who don't take kindly to the invasion of their country, has been praising up the race relations policies of the Labour and Liberal Democratic Parties.

This is not altogether surprising.

Way back in the 1980s and earlier, Labour's lunatic left elements on local councils were promoting the coloured invasion of British neighbourhoods in the inner cities and the dispossession of the native British for all they were worth. These race policies, formerly applied mostly at local level, are now likely to be written into the Labour Party's official manifesto at the coming election, and imposed as government policy across the length and breadth of Britain if Labour is elected.

This is the more so since already, under the Tories, non-Whites are being deliberately encouraged by every powerful agency in the country to regard the whole of Britain as their oyster, and spread out accordingly to every corner of the country in ever growing numbers.

The current unending floodtide of further immigrants from the Third World is also, as things stand, expected to continue without anyone lifting a finger seriously against it.

Meanwhile, as ethnic voting clout grows, the Liberal Democrats are busily jumping onto the same bandwaggon as Labour.

Paddy Ashdown's adviser on 'community relations' is one Mrs. Zerbanoo Gifford. Mrs. Gifford is the Asian wife of a British lawyer. She has been selected as Liberal Democratic parliamentary candidate for Hertsmere, in Hertfordshire.

SOB STORIES

She first launched her political career amid sob stories that 'racists' had been threatening to firebomb her home. However, far from suffering any such untoward happening, she seems since then to have carved out quite a cosy little niche for herself in Britain's public life.

Now she is demanding that a national police squad be set up on behalf of herself and her fellow immigrants to put down alleged 'racial attacks' against them by native Britons. She does not as yet seem to have been so forthcoming with suggestions as to how police action can be arranged to protect British people in the inner cities, including women, children and old folk, who have been suffering a nightmare of criminal terror for years past.

It is thought likely that Mr. Ashdown will look at these matters very much from Mrs. Gifford's point of view. Not so long ago, the Liberal Democratic leader, who is said to speak fluent Chinese, was all for an unlimited influx of Hong Kongers. Britain, he said, should even be prepared to build any amount of brand new houses to accommodate them. We know of no proposals Mr. Ashdown has for solving our own people's housing problems.

As for the Tories, whilst the CRE conmplain that they are not so enthusiastic as the other parties for beefed-up race laws, this is probably only a matter of appearances. For the moment, the Tories are facing a tricky general election in which they will need every white vote they can get.

Nevertheless, John Major's personal position on race is well known — as Tory leader in Brixton in the late sixties he led the moves to expel from his local party supporters of Enoch Powell's stand against non-white immigration. He also saw to it that in the early seventies local housing estates were thrown open to Blacks. Apart from anything else, he thus bears a large measure of responsibility for what has happened there since.

Lunatic left-wing Labourite Ken Livingstone, one-time head of the negrophile GLC and now one of Kinnock's MPs, continues to speak well of Mr. Major to this day. It is thought that he and Major fully see eye-to-eye on race, and that once returned to office the Tories would pursue policies on the issue basically no different from Labour's.

THE THATCHER LEGACY

It is now acknowledged that in the 1980s coloured immigration hit record levels in the US under Reagan. Anything that was true of the America of Ronald Reagan was certainly no less true of the Britain of Margaret Thatcher. As has long been recognised, the duo were just two halves of a single act. Behind their 'showbiz' veneer of patriotic-sounding 'conservative' rhetoric, both leaders were busily dragging their respective countries into the Third World-style morass in which both are suffocating today. In Britain, Major was quite content to serve under Mrs. Thatcher while this was going on. And if anything he is even more of a multi-racialist than she is.

So who now speaks for the British?

Labour? The Liberal Democrats? The Tories? What a sick joke!

All of them are sell-out merchants, not to say anti-British traitors. And they're hardly even bothering to keep it quiet anymore.

If British people want even so much as a voice in their own land — let alone a future for their children — they will have to look elsewhere. Nationalism is their last chance. In the coming election only a vote for the British National Party can count!

HARD-NOSED!

Hong Kongers show no sign of slushy 'liberal' attitude to refugees, as in Britain

PRIME MINISTER John Major, when visiting Hong Kong last month, posed ostentatiously for photographs in the company of Vietnamese refugee children. It was reported in the Daily Mail that: "Later, his voice filled with emotion, he said: 'Nobody can have a look at the camps and see the concern of the people who live there and hear the stories of why they came without being moved.' "

Politically aware people in Britain will immediately recognise the warning signs here. We are being softened up to accept a new large intake of Vietnamese — accompanied by the usual violins and sob-stories of their unhappy condition. As usual, the influential and the powerful in this country will be telling us of our solemn duty to open our doors to these people. But does the rest of the world have the same weak, sloppy attitude? Certainly not.

A recent official survey in Hong Kong showed that the vast majority of the colony's mainly Chinese population favours towing Vietnamese boat refugees seeking asylum there back out to sea and leaving them to their fate.

88 per-cent of those questioned in the government-sponsored poll said that Hong Kong should abolish its 'port of first asylum policy' under which thousands of Vietnamese have been claiming the right of admission.

Asked whether the asylum policy should be done away with, even if it meant that the boat people might drown, an overwhelming 70 per-cent said yes.

ASIATIC REALISM

Attitudes towards Vietnamese boat people have been almost equally hard-nosed throughout Asia. Japan, which has grown fat and rich from taking over the industrial activities of Britain and other white nations, has been hugely reluctant to take any of them. And when the boat exodus from Vietnam began just over a decade ago, Malaysia even threatened to mine its beaches to stop them from landing.

All this reflects an interesting light on claims that Britain and other white countries have some sort of a 'moral obligation' to let teeming millions of Asians and others into their territory on demand — claims which have come from both our home-grown corrupt and spiritually diseased 'liberals' in high places and from spokespeople for the often millions-strong alien groups who want to come west, not least the Hong Kong Chinese themselves.

'CARING' FACE ON PREMIER
Mr. Major, seen here in Hong with Vietnamese refugee children, looks as if he is trying to soften Britain up for a new influx. Hong Kongers' attitudes are very different; they don't suffer from the same 'liberal' complex as our own politicial leaders.

Asians and other 'Third Worlders' may have very good reasons from their own point of view for refusing to do anything for other members of their own racial families — as they so often do.

How much more reason then do we in Britain and the West have to refuse to do anything for any of them.

One thing at least seems certain. From this indifference of 'Third World' peoples towards one another it is easy to see how little compassion they are ever going to have towards us if, through our continuing fatuous liberal weakness, we end up giving our own countries away to them.

No doubt they even now look on us as the patsies of all history, as we passively allow them to flood our territory.

If Whites want a future, it is high time for them, too, to start beefing up their attitude towards the demands of aliens.

Spoken like a politician!

FORMER FRENCH PRESIDENT TRIES TO PIRATE LE PEN'S ANTI-IMMIGRATION POLICY

FORMER French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing last month did a spectacular about-turn on the issue of Third World immigration into France, issuing what was reported in one paper as "an explosive warning that his country is being invaded by immigrants."

M. Giscard d'Estaing, when at the height of his political career in the 1970s, was never heard making any kind of strong stand against immigration but, on the contrary, loudly attacked those, such as Jean-Marie le Pen, who were opposing the immigrant influx, throwing at them the usual epithet of 'racist'. When President, Giscard did absolutely nothing of any effectiveness to limit the invasion of his country.

Now, however, he is singing a very different tune. In his recent statement he said: "French nationality should belong only to those with a blood right." And he continued: "The sort of problem France faces is changing from one of immigration to one of invasion."

These warnings were made in an interview with the magazine Le Figaro.

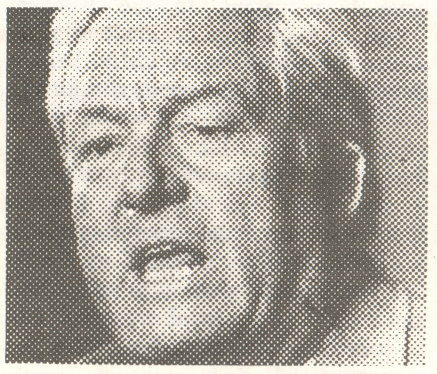
Giscard's 'conversion' comes hot on the heels of that of former presidential candidate Jacques Chirac, who, from having also been an 'anti-racist' and having slammed M. Le Pen for his stand against immigration, recently came out with a loud declaration of opposition to the non-white influx into France.

Why have Messieurs Chirac and Giscard d'Estaing so dramatically changed course on this issue? The answer is simple: they are professional politicians, and they say the things they think their would-be voters want to hear. In the past, the political climate in France was not so favourable to a strong stand against immigration as it is today, and so Chirac and Giscard were 'anti-racists'. Now, however, and due mainly to the strong and consistent stand made by M. Le Pen, the climate is very different, and opposing immigration wins more votes than it loses. Having attacked Le Pen in the past for this policy, these two are now trying to steal his support by adopting almost the same policy.

It would not seem to be coincidental that M. Giscard d'Estaing is currently hoping to make a bid to regain the French presidency!

All this goes to provide a hint as to just how sincere are those politicians in Britain who today stand up and strike lofty and self-righteous poses against 'racism' and fall over themselves to welcome and curry favour with the 'ethnic minorities', while attacking the BNP. All they are really doing is tailoring their positions to suit the demands of their political careers. The moment their nostrils detected that those careers would be better served by their being anti-immigration, even 'racist', that is what they would be.

When the BNP begins to win large-scale public support in Britain, as it will, we will need to be on our guard against these Johnny-come-lately 'converts' to our cause and recognise them as the impostors that they are.



LE PEN
Has been consistent in his opposition to immigration in France. Now others are trying to steal his clothes.

Ponderable quote

"...the present battle to defend the British race is the ultimate battle, and the one in which we must be the victors. For there will be no second chance."

WHITES ATTACKED AS RACE WAR HITS NORTHERN TOWNS

IN BRADFORD, Halifax and Rochdale vicious race wars have broken out in recent months. In these wars, gangs of Asian thugs have made bids to take control of large portions of the towns concerned, driving out native British folk to establish exclusively Asian ghettos. There are of course many Asians who are perfectly law-abiding and would not condone the actions of these gangsters, but the conflict that has come about provides yet more example of the disastrous failure of the multi-racial society.

In Bradford, Belinda Burns, eight months pregnant, now faces life as a widow after her husband Ian was stabbed to death by Asians. Typically, a defence campaign has been launched in support of the six gangsters responsible. But what about sad Belinda? Because she is white and British no-one seems to care.

In Rochdale a 23-year-old man was stabbed in an unprovoked attack by five Asians, who took him down a side street and assaulted him before knifing him. This came after continuing violence between Asians and Whites. In response to that, an Asian-owned shop was the target of graffiti vandals who daubed 'White Power' on the outside. In contrast to the assault and stabbing, where no arrests were made, police, in a heavy-handed operation arrested 17 people in connection with the graffiti. Residents said that they apprehended anyone who happened to be in the street. Police then raided a nearby estate. Julie Proctor had her door kicked in after she refused to let a group of them in without a search warrant — and she wasn't the only one to suffer: several complaints have now been made by local residents to the Police Complaints Authority.

In Halifax the campaign of violence by Asian gangs has now become so blatant that even the local paper is no longer making excuses for them. The Halifax Evening Courier has been following events, which started when a gang of eight to ten Asians armed with bottles, iron bars and rice-flails attacked two men in a taxi office, inflicting serious injury on them. Fifteen minutes later, the same Asians jumped out of a car and attacked another man, who needed stitches after

Attempted TV 'con' reveals desperation in Tory camp

THE TORY PARTY is really getting desperate in its attempts to persuade the British electorate to give it another term when the next election comes. This was evident in its TV party political broadcast last month. The broadcast was such a blatant 'con' that it embarrassed even some of the party's supporters.

Saatchi & Saatchi (who else?) were mainly responsible for the job, though they called in film-maker John Schlesinger to help. One report on the performance, published in the Sunday Times the following weekend, was headed 'Fact mingles with fiction in Tory broadcast'. For once, we find ourselves agreeing with that paper.

In terms of making party political points, the broadcast in fact did not say as much as might have been expected. Quite obviously, its purpose was to lull the British electorate into a pleasant and peaceful doze, induced by the feeling that the nation's affairs were in good hands and there was nothing at all to worry about. In the background was the beautifully relaxing theme from the slow movement of Mozart's 21st piano concerto, and the commentary might have been saying to the listener: "You...are...going...to...slee-ee-p."A day in the life of Mr. and Mrs. Britain then unfolded, with various comforting scenes flitting across the screen as the orchestra did its bit. The mood and tempo was caught perfectly by a report in the Daily Telegraph by Charles Moore. Although the paper in question is a firm supporter of the Tory Party, this propaganda piece was rather too much even for its loyal digestion. Let us join Mr. Moore as he relates the sequences:-

> "Sun edges up through the trees. Cows start walking. One of our few remaining fishermen hauls in his catch. Digital alarm clock goes off at 6 o'clock. Man delivers milk in German van. Flowers go on sale. People in boiler suits, including Blacks and women, clock in for work. It is 7.45.
> "Commuters get out of trains. No cars are visible. Children arrive at school. A nurse hands a drink to an old woman in hospital. A young woman goes jogging. A man falls off his motor bike; a black policeman stops the traffic and an ambulance team comes to the rescue.
> "Now it is lunchtime, indicated by an elegant old church clock. A pensioner in braces pauses from hoeing and eats a sandwich. The camera flies over green hill and dale to the Forth Bridge, and there finds a submarine. A Harrier jet jumps skywards. It is 3 p.m., according to another elegant old clock (in Rye). Multi-racial children skip in hazy sunlight.
> "Time to go home. Cars this time, but trains too. An office worker runs for his train, but misses it because it has left on time. It is 18.24. A woman walks her dogs on the seashore. On a village green they are playing cricket (What, on a working day? BN). A clergyman is umpire. A couple kiss.
> "Twilight now, and an eight rowing on a river. People working late in an office. Mr. Major working late at No. 10. He begins to speak. A child goes to sleep, and lights go off in suburban bedrooms. Darkness. Suddenly there is the face of a woman in pain. She is in labour. She gives birth to a boy. It is one minute to midnight."

Mr. Moore might also have mentioned that in one hospital scene the doctor waiting to treat the patient being wheeled in was also black, but perhaps he felt he had made enough references to colour already. He went on to say:-

> "What did the pictures say? They said that we British are rich and peaceful and gentle and modern and traditional; that we love our leisure and are always relaxed, and yet that our working day is 12 hours long.
> "What was absent from this vision of our life today? Anything about abroad, any inner city, any image of conflict, any litter, any traffic jam, any cloud in the sky, any mention of the Conservative Party...
> "I suppose one ought to disapprove. The thing was, after all, preposterous. 'This looks like a nice country,' was one's cynical reaction, 'may one go and live in it?' Yet I cannot help thinking it was rather brilliant.
> "For the point, after more than 12 years of Conservative government, is not to try to excite people about the new things one means to do. That would raise the question of why one had not done them..."

Preposterous the broadcast indeed was. Brilliant? Well, that is a matter of opinion. It was clearly put together by people who have such a low estimate of the British public's intelligence that they did not consider for a moment that many would ask the awkward questions that came obviously to any reasonably perceptive observer, questions of which Mr. Moore himself raised a few.

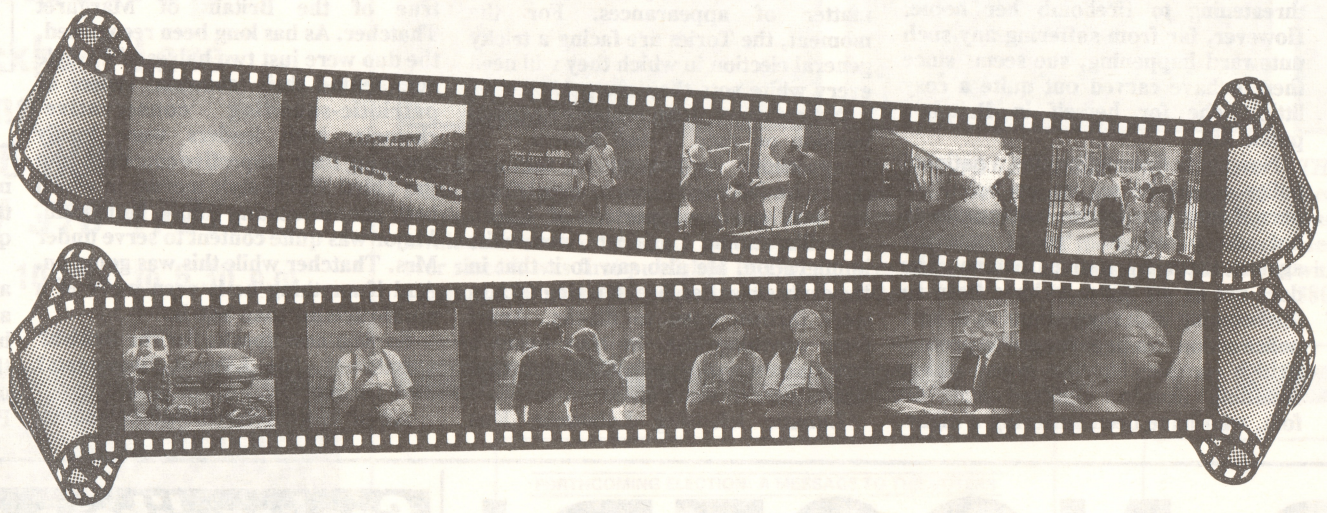
FALSEHOODS

What the Daily Telegraph report did not do was point out the numerous misleading assertions and, in cases, downright falsehoods in the broadcast. Here the Sunday Times was less fastidious. It put under the microscope the claim that "over 1 million more British people go to work than in 1979," and reminded readers that this included 400,000 on government schemes and a huge increase (1.63 million) in people in part-time work. In fact, as the ST concluded, the number of people in full-time work has actually fallen by about 600,000 over the past decade.

The Sunday Times also dissected the broadcast's claim that "Today we export more per head of the population than Japan or the USA." As it stated, "European countries export more per head than the US or Japan because they sell more to each other." In fact, as the ST remarked, Britain exports less per-head within the European Community than any other member. The assertion of the broadcast concerning British exports, while not exactly a lie, was grossly misleading. It also conveniently failed to mention where Britain stood concerning the relationship between exports and imports.

"Manufacturing productivity," trumpeted the broadcast,"has risen faster than in every other major industrial country — including Japan," Wrong, said the Sunday Times. "From May 1979 to June 1991 output per man-hour (productivity) in British manufacturing rose by about 50 per-cent. Japan showed an increase of 70 per-cent over that period. Britain's business productivity, including services, rose by 2.1 per-cent a year in the 1980s, the same as Italy's. Japan was in the lead with a 3 per-cent rise; France had a 2.6 per-cent increase."

Did the viewing public allow itself to be 'conned' by the broadcast, as it was obviously intended it should? Well, very shortly afterwards it was announced that the Tories, after having held a lead in the opinion polls for a month or so, had suddenly fallen 4 per-cent behind Labour. Maybe — just maybe — the British electorate is not quite as stupid as Tory propagandists imagine it to be. Maybe — just maybe — it saw this latest effort from Central Office, as presented by Messrs. Saatchi & Saatchi and Schlesinger, as the gigantic spoof that it was!



T.V. SOPORIFIC
A few shots from the Tory propaganda film shown last month

The riots: to what extent was the racial factor involved?

IN Cardiff's riot-hit Ely neighbourhood the root of the trouble seems to have been Pakistani shopkeeper Abdul Waheed. The patience of local residents on the poverty-stricken estate, 65 per-cent of whom are out of work, finally snapped when Mr. Waheed took out a court injunction to stop his neighbour, white shopkeeper Mr. Carl Agius, selling bread in competition to himself.

Youths attacked Mr. Waheed's shop and drove him into hiding. It seems that he had been showing a high-handed attitude towards them which had been raising the hackles of the community for some time.

Questioned as to whether the riot was racial or not, the Rev. Robert Morgan, chairman of South Glamorganshire Council, denied this. He did, however, admit that residents "might call [Mr. Waheed] a Paki."

But he added: "They use the term in a particular way as an identification. The reason they are determined to get him out seems to be that he has not handled his customers very sensitively."

Similarly coy was Mrs. Susan Agius, wife of the white newsagent with whom Mr. Waheed started the dispute. According to Mrs. Agius, "people do not want [Mr. Waheed and his family] out because they are Pakistanis. It is because of the way Mr. Waheed has behaved."

But one local woman, asked whether she thought it was a bread riot or a race riot, replied: "You don't go out fighting over bread."

ASIAN SHOPS ATTACKED

Likewise, in Meadow Well Estate, North Shields, half a dozen Asian shops in a local parade were singled out for attack. The neighbouring wool shop, butchery and greengrocery, all run by British shopkeepers, seem to have been left alone.

Questioned afterwards, two of the Asians, named only as the brothers-in-law Singh, gave some of the background. The Singhs, one of whom had been a Bradford bus conductor, the other an electronics worker in Birmingham, had moved in after being tipped off by another Asian that property in the industrally depressed North East of England could be snapped up for a song.

But by the Singhs' own testimony they found they were never really welcome in the community. One of them complained that they received sporadic abuse and that living on Meadow Well had become "like being in jail" even before the riots.

There seems to be great reluctance by all — the shopkeepers, the media, the Government — to admit the racial motive that appears to have been present. Certainly such a motive would indicate that many Britons are no longer in a mood uncomplainingly to put up with the multi-racialist new order that so much energy has been put into bringing about.

Meanwhile, it is not thought that any of the Asians involved will be able to return to their shops. Said the Rev. Morgan of Mr. Waheed: "Even when the violence subsides, I don't see how he will be able to carry on in the area because I don't think he will get much business."

The Singhs, for their part, are very reluctant to move back into Meadow Well. Speaking from local authority-financed temporary accommodation, where he and the rest of the Asians from the estate had been hiding away, guarded by a CID minder, one of them said: "What I am most afraid of is that the insurance will pay to repair the property and in that case we will have to go back."

ECONOMY GOES FROM BAD TO WORSE

THE RECESSION will get worse. That's the verdict of all the top analysts and businessmen. The Government, which has made such a hash of the economy, is going to bequeath to us even tougher times ahead. John Major, who as former Chancellor of the Exchequer has got us into this mess, has largely himself to blame.

Factory output prices are now at their highest for nine years. These figures, and the 2½ per-cent increase in VAT, are going to raise the cost of living all round.

Unemployment continues to soar and, as predicted in British Nationalist in June, will reach 2½ million by Christmas, with a further half million losing their jobs by the following Summer.

At the same time, high street sales are still down, as canny customers are saving their money in case they end up on the dole themselves.

Meanwhile, the pathetic series of ½ per-cent drops in the interest rate have had little effect. All in all, the economy continues to go downhill.

The plight of the all-important motor industry reveals the true picture. Sales and output are shrinking faster than at any time in the industry's history, with jobs being lost at the rate of 1,000 per week. Sales are down by a third on last year's levels. In the last 12 months 28,500 jobs have been lost. Over the coming year another 40,000 are likely to go. And still no end to the recession is in sight.

No wonder Mr. Major feels worried as another election looms!

YOUR LETTERS

Sir, — I am becoming increasingly concerned at the attempt by some chief constables to 'criminalise' the lawful political activities of the BNP. Your September edition quoted a newspaper report as saying that the Grampian police force would "crack down" on any attempt by the BNP to recruit members.

This disturbing trend is borne out by a recent experience of the Nottingham BNP. Recently some of us had just completed a leafletting session when we were approached by two policemen, who demanded to know if we had been leafletting the area. They claimed that a "member of the public" (no doubt a left-wing loony) had phoned the police saying that they disagreed with the political views of the BNP! The two plods examined the leaflets and admitted they could find nothing illegal in them. Having acknowledged that no crime had taken place, they then demanded our names and addresses — they were unable to explain why they needed this information.

The lesson of this is obvious. Each time you receive election literature from Labour, Tories or Liberal Democrats, phone the police and complain: say that you find anti-British literature grossly offensive, and demand that the leafletters are stopped and interrogated. I wonder if the police will respond with equal enthusiasm.

LAURENCE A. JOHNSON

Sir, — I would like to congratulate you on the very good job you are doing with British Nationalist. It's brilliant!

The BNP needs to get as much local publicity as possible. One method is for every party unit to get its members writing letters to the local paper. Ayr BNP did this and got the letters published, so I shall be doing the same thing here in Cumnock.

British Nationalist interviews BNP leader JOHN TYNDALL

B.N.*: In Mary Kenny's report of her interview with you which appeared in the Sunday Telegraph on September 15th the BNP was described as a "one issue party." Would you admit to this?

J.T.: Definitely not. The BNP will be going to the voters at the next election with a wide range of policies dealing with every issue of national importance. It is inevitable, however, that the issue of race and immigration occupies a very high place on our list of priorities. The racial threat to Britain, if not tackled head-on and removed before very long, will lead to a permanent and irrevocable change in the British population, and if that happens it will be the end of Britain as the nation we know. This will render us incapable of dealing with our many other problems. We will be on the way to beoming a Third World country, with Third World standards.

B.N.*: So what will be the other issues on which the party will be fighting?

J.T.: We will be campaigning for Britain's withdrawal from the European Community, and we shall be the only party of any consequence which stands for that policy. We shall offer a policy for full employment by means of economic nationalism, which means abandonment of 'free market' practices and the protection of British manufacturing industry by excluding imported products from the home market. We shall be campaigning for the restoration of the death penalty as part of a general programme of greater toughness towards criminals. In connection with this, we shall be advocating a much tougher policy on Northern Ireland, which will include an all-out war against the IRA and a shoot-to-kill policy against known republican terrorists. We shall be opposing defence cuts and calling for stronger, not weaker, armed forces. We shall be opposing overseas aid, except where it can be used to negotiate reciprocal benefits for Britain — we acknowledge no automatic obligation on this country's part to feed and keep the Third World, only an obligation to look after our own people.

These are the main issues that lie at the surface of things, but underlying them is a national sickness that goes much deeper. This country, very simply, is running out of control; it is falling apart; we have lost the will to live as a nation. This is the outcome of decades of weak government, of weakness in almost every sphere of national affairs. It can only be reversed by a revolution in British life, the central development of which must be the resurgence of authority.

B.N.*: There will be some people who say that this sounds like fascism or nazism. What do you say to that?

J.T.: Fascism was Italian; nazism was German; we are British. We will do things in our own way; we will not copy foreigners.

B.N.*: Some will take your advocacy of protectionism as an indication that you believe Britain can be isolated from the world economy. Is this is fact what you are saying?

J.T.: No. it is not. Japan is not isolated from the world economy but trades extensively with the rest of the world; she nevertheless has largely managed to exclude foreign manufactured goods from her own internal market. Put simply, she imports the things she has to import and produces the remainder herself. This is what Britain should do.

B.N.*: What is your answer to those who say that this protection will lead to the 'featherbedding' of British industry, and that the key to industrial recovery lies in improving our performance?

J.T.: Certainly we have to improve our performance, but the question is: how do we do it? 'Free market' practices have not brought our performance up to the level of our main competitors. Nor has protection diminished the performance of Japanese industry, least of all 'featherbedded' it. Our party does not advocate protection as a 'cure-all', only as a policy that must be applied along with other policies to regenerate the industrial sector. However, without protection and consequent exclusive access to the home market British industry simply is not going to possess the strength or resources to carry out the other policies that are needed for regeneration. It must all start with a 'Buy British' policy, but it must not end there.

B.N.*: Is Britain big enough to go it alone without Europe?

J.T.: Sweden, Switzerland, Austria, Iceland and many other nations much smaller than Britain have been prospering without being members of the European Community. Besides, withdrawal from Europe does not necessarily mean 'going it alone'. If we withdraw from Europe we can then set about restoring our broken relations with Australia, New Zealand and Canada. Together with these countries, we could build an economic area of tremendous strength.

B.N.*: How do we know that these countries would agree to form such an area?

J.T.: We do not know until we try, but common sense dictates that it would be greatly to their advantage to do so. They are all countries which produce big surpluses of primary products. A decision by Britain to give special preference to them in the import of these products would carry tremendous weight in negotiating reciprocal trading arrangements.

B.N.*: Turning to law and order, a recent development that has captured much attention has been the hooliganism and rioting in Oxford and Newcastle. Do you believe that the BNP policies of tougher penalties will cure this?

J.T.: Only partially. Here we come back to the deeper national sickness that I mentioned earlier. It has been said that the young people in these areas are 'deprived'. I believe they are indeed deprived, but not in the sense portrayed by the Archbishop of Canterbury and the usual gang of 'trendy' sociologists. What they are deprived of most of all is leadership — real leadership, together with a source of authority they can respect. They need taking by the scruff of the neck and organising into a force that will be deployed usefully in the service of their country. Their ample spare time needs to be filled by mobilisation for constructive works, and here I believe that an element of regimentation would be fully justified. In the younger stage they should be organised within a national youth movement; later they should be conscripted for national service. Discipline should be instilled into them by whatever means are necessary.

But this must not be mere discipline for its own sake. The discipline must stem from their membership of a newly constructed society, governed by strong ideals which they can respect and with which they can identify. The first of these must be nationalism and national pride. Without those things a population becomes a rabble, and this is what a large part of the British population has become today — little better than a rabble.

B.N.*: Concerning Northern Ireland, you have advocated a shoot-to-kill policy against terrorists. This will invite the reply that if a shoot-to-kill policy is adopted errors may be made in the passing on of information about alleged terrorists and innocent people may be liquidated. What do you say to that?

J.T.: If innocent people lose their lives in the carrying out of such a policy it will be unfortunate; but this is war, and in war innocent people do stand to get killed. We accept their deaths as a price that we pay for the ending of the war and the consequent saving of many more innocent lives. However, if our intelligence services are properly organised, such errors are likely to be very few, if any.

B.N.*: The BNP expects to be fighting two seats in Scotland, where it will be up against the Scottish Nationalists. What is your answer to those who ask what is the difference between the nationalism of the BNP and that of the SNP?

J.T.: We are British Nationalists, and as such we are determined to keep Britain together as one nation, with Scotland occupying the vital and honoured part in that nation that she has always occupied since the Act of Union. The SNP wants to break Britain up. That is an obvious enough difference.

not be fighting enough seats in the coming election to win a majority in the country and form a government. Can we win individual seats? It is possible, and we shall be going flat out to achieve just that.

But even if we do not win one single seat, if we can obtain good votes in the seats we fight we will have enormously enhanced our credibility and given a sign that we are a potential force to be reckoned with in the future. As voters see other voters supporting us, they too will be encouraged to support us and, bit by bit, the 'cannot win' syndrome will be overcome.

What the British voters have to decide in this election is whether they want to carry on with the old Tweedledum and Tweedledee of the prevailing party system, with bad governments their lot regardless of whom they vote for, or strike out to build something new, to lay the foundations for really radical changes in the way Britain is run. Real radical changes in a country like ours will not be achieved overnight; they must be worked for by a gradual process. The first step is to create a movement with a strong public voice that everyone can hear. The voters will help to do this even if they do no more than enable us to win back a few deposits in the coming election. If we can retrieve those deposits, our public voice will have been immensely increased and our national audience greatly extended.

But, as I have indicated, none of this means that we shall not be entering the coming elections with the intention of winning. We shall be fighting to win, but we expect to gain immensely even if we do not win.

But the 'nationalism' of the SNP is not even honest. They want to take Scotland out of the United Kingdom but to make her a member of the European Community, in which she would lose any independence she gained from leaving Britain and in which, as one of the smaller states in Europe, she would in fact have much less influence than in Britain.

Not only this, the SNP welcomes Blacks, Asians and other aliens into Scotland as part of its commitment to multi-racialism. As with England and Wales, these intruders will gradually erode and eventually destroy Scotland's distinct identity and native culture. So we shall be asking Scottish voters: which of the two parties is the more dedicated to the preservation of all that is Scottish in Scotland? It should be clear that it is the BNP.

B.N.*: As a final question, what do you say to those who will claim that, although they sympathise with BNP policies, they will not vote for you because you cannot win?

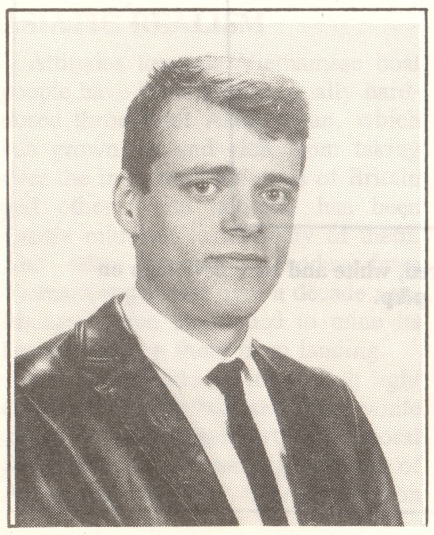
J.T.: It depends entirely what is meant by 'win'. Obviously, we will

BNP man beats trumped up charges

IN June we reported in the feature headed 'Bloody heroes' that a daring group of BNP members walked into an Al Sharpton meeting to put the white point of view. During the meeting a smoke-bomb was let off by persons unknown and in the ensuing chaos the BNP men made good their exit. We reported that none of our members was wanted in connection with the incident.



Subsequently, however, and as a direct result of black political pressure, one BNP member, Ian Dell (pictured on right), was charged by the police.

We are now pleased to be able to announce that this charge has been successfully fought off in the court — in fact the charge was dropped after the police admitted that there was no evidence at all against Ian.

Nevertheless, despite the fact that he has been found innocent, Ian has incurred costs in fighting the case, amounting to £180.

A whip-round among nationalists at Brick Lane has raised £50 towards this total, leaving £130 still to be found. We appeal to all readers and supporters to contribute to raise this sum to help out a fine and courageous party activist. Please make out cheques/POs to 'Ian Dell Fine', and send to PO Box 117, Welling, Kent DA16 3DW.

ELECTION FUND: MORE EFFORT NEEDED!

Contributions to the British National Party Election Fund so far have come to £1,115.00. This leaves a total still to be raised of £3,885.00.

We have to say that, at a time when the BNP is in most respects prospering hugely — membership, activity, meeting attendances and votes all increasing, this is not good enough.

We appreciate of course that around the country branches that are fighting seats in the next election are making demands on their members for money to finance their local campaigns. That means less money in those members' pockets available to contribute to Headquarters.

But unless the election campaign is adequately financed at the centre of operations our performance everywhere will suffer. Upon the national impact that the party is able to make will depend largely the success of the local constituency campaigns.

It is also true that many members and supporters live in areas where no local seats are being fought, so that they cannot plead the excuse that their spare funds have been accounted for supporting local candidates.

We must this month ask all readers, whether BNP members or not, to make an extra special financial sacrifice to boost the party's Election Fund.

Please mark all contributions 'Election Fund' and send them to PO Box 117, Welling, Kent DA16 3DW.

RACE WAR IN NORTH

being coshed. This came after an identical attack the day before. Following these attacks, two other men were assaulted in the street by Asian gangs.

In a revenge attack, the Central Madni Mosque was petrol-bombed and daubed with paint.

We reiterate: while these gangs are not representative of the Asian community as a whole, they testify to the failure of the policy of multi-racialism. This policy must be ended before Britain goes up in flames with race war. The disparate ethnic communities in this country cannot live together — and that means that the ethnic minorities must go.

FORTHCOMING ELECTION: A MESSAGE TO THE VOTERS

If you want to defend RIGHTS FOR WHITES — then you must vote

BRITISH NATIONAL PARTY

In the next election you can vote for Britain's new and fastest-growing party, the British National Party. This is the only party that will put the British people first in this area — in jobs, in housing, in education and in social welfare.

Native-born British people are fast becoming second class citizens in their own country. Only the British National Party will defend their rights, the rights of the white community.

The towns and cities of Britain have suffered for years under the Tories, Labour and the Liberals/Liberal Democrats. Now is your chance to vote for a real change. For your children's sake, you must vote for your British National Party candidate.

BRITISH NATIONAL PARTY BNP

Printed & published by BNP, PO Box 117, Welling, Kent DA16 3DW

BNP election warm-up leaflet — suitable for distribution in areas where the party has decided to contest seats but at an early stage in the campaign. Based on the 'Rights for Whites' theme, it is especially valuable in districts where immigration and race are a big issue. The leaflet is applicable to parliamentary or local government elections. £4.50 per 1,000, with postage charges of £4.10 for 1,000 and £4.65 for £2,000.

WAKE UP SCOTLAND! BNP

Thanks to immigration since the Second World War, there are now 6 million Blacks and Asians in Britain.

Thousands and thousands of these are now coming to Scotland, coming to take our homes and our jobs. Tens of thousands are already here — mainly Asians. Parts of Glasgow have already been taken over, and every small town has now got its immigrants. On top of this, the Government plans to dump half of Hong Kong's 3 million Chinese here in Scotland!

The treacherous anti-British government in Westminster has also laid waste to Britain's, and Scotland's, industrial base on behalf of foreign competition in the Common Market — to 'reduce' industrial capacity — at the same time reducing everyone's standard of living and throwing thousands on the dole! Thousands of workers have been laid off in perfectly productive and profitable industries — remember the Ravenscraig steel works?

The Labour, Tory, Liberal and Scottish 'National' parties have done absolutely nothing for the people of Scotland. They have stood idly by while industry has been crippled and jobs lost. And all of them have positively welcomed immigration into Scotland. All of them stand Asian candidates at election times.

This is why the British National Party is leading the fight against immigration and job losses in Scotland. We say enough is enough! We call upon all Scots to rise up to protect our homeland, our people, our jobs and our way of life. Together, we can win!

BNP street power shocks enemy

TONY WELLS reports on the aftermath of Bermondsey

SHOCK WAVES are still being felt following the BNP's successful counter-demonstration in Bermondsey in August.

The counter-demo — against a provoc-ative black march through all-white Bermondsey, South East London, drew hundreds of local white folk to oppose the march. Whites, fed up with being pushed into second place in their own country, are fighting back.

After the fantastic BNP demo, hundreds of local white youths blocked the retreating black and red marchers and, as an inevitable consequence of the evils of the multi-racial society, political opposition was replaced, spontaneously, by direct action.

One thing is for sure. Bermondsey will never be the same again, and with the British National Party contesting the constituency at the coming general election there will be a strong racial overtone to the campaign. The questions are: just how much of a lasting impression has the party made and, more importantly, can it capitalise at election time on the massive display of support shown by white people on its recent counter-demo?

These questions cannot be answered now — only time will tell. But there is now an excellent BNP branch in Bermondsey with a superb organiser in Steve Tyler. What can be gauged, however, is the huge amount of media coverage (from a biased press at that) which extended by TV and radio all over London but which has reached saturation coverage in South London. It is this saturation coverage that tells us just what importance the local media give to the counter-demo — and to the BNP. To see what impact we had, we need only look at the pages of a normally hostile press and at the words of the organiser of the black march, Lee Jasper.

HUGE PRESS COVERAGE

The South London Press (SLP) used its next two editions to cover the day, while the Southwark & Bermondsey News (SBN) gave it pages 1, 7, 8, 9 and 10 — five pages in all! The South London Press ran a huge front-page story headed 'Sheer hate', while the SBN led its story with a quote from march organiser Jasper saying: "We'll be back." Inside, the SBN ran a big headline criticising the march as "stupid, provoc-ative and immature," and went on to say: "It has done immense harm to community relations in Bermondsey" and "given the British National Party the greatest recruiting boost it has had for years...and now they (the marchers) say they're going to do it all over again."

The SBN called the day's events "the worst street violence in living memory" and said: "Earlier, the march started peacefully...but there was an air of tension as the march moved north of the Old Kent Road. The violence began shortly before 3.00 p.m. as the group passed 'Tropics'. White youths inside the pub burst out to attack them and police had to force them back into the pub." And when local Whites blocked the marchers' retreat, "bottles, stones and wooden sticks suddenly rained down on police and marchers alike...

"When it was over, the march organisers blamed the police for protecting the fascists — that wasn't the way we saw it." (That wasn't the way this writer saw it either!)

An interesting article in Black Briton started: "A peaceful demonstration of 1,000 ended in near disaster after marchers were set upon by British National Party supporters..." march and counter-demo. After starting with: "Marchers had to endure an atmosphere of hatred as they wound their way through the streets of Peckham and Camberwell," it went on with: "Racial violence exploded on South London streets on Saturday."

LOCAL VIEWS

The really interesting part, however, in gauging the level of local support was the selection of interviews the SLP conducted on the Silwood Estate. This estate was the focus for the BNP's counter-demonstration. We saw ourselves the huge degree of support that we enjoyed there on the day, but let's hear what the SLP said: "Worse was to come (after the march was attacked outside 'Tropics'). As the march turned into Abbeyfield Road, it was confronted by a sea of Union Jacks hanging from the balconies on the Silwood Estate." The SLP continued by saying that the marchers going into Southwark Road were confronted by hundreds of right-wing counter-demonstrators, and then it recounted the white assault on the retreating march.

March organiser Lee Jasper provides an interesting and funny insight into the day. Immediately after the march, he was on the radio giving forth about how the police had when the full scale of the marchers' defeat had penetrated even his thick skull he changed his tune. After previously attacking the police for protecting the BNP, he said of them: "They couldn't guarantee our safety because of their lack of manpower ...Even I was surprised at the support the BNP was able to muster on the day."

In Black Briton, Jasper was even more frank, figuring perhaps that the honkies in the BNP wouldn't read what he'd said: "They surrounded us in Southwark Park, and the police failed to do their job in protecting us. All in all, we were lucky to get the people out of there with their lives." He finished by saying: "It was a hopeless situation, but at least we managed to get out as a group without major injuries. If people think the fascists are a small group they are sadly wrong. During this economic downturn the BNP are getting a large number of white youths on their side."

The SLP must have felt moved by the scale of the support for the BNP because it ran a sub-story entitled 'BNP rally was "a big success"' and went on: "The BNP hailed its counter-rally as a resounding success but refused to take the blame for the ensuing violence." BNP South London Organiser Richard Edmonds was extensively quoted, for example: "We were standing up for the people of Bermondsey, and the young people of the area supported our position 100 per-cent."

The SLP followed this up by reporting interviews with five residents on the Silwood Estate. Jacinta (26) thought the march had made race relations worse; Denise (25) said that the march had "increased racism in the area" but that it was "mainly Whites causing the trouble." Perhaps Denise missed what Jason (23) saw — "The BNP got the blame for the violence but the marchers started it by burning the Union Jack." Sandra (20) said that both the BNP and the Blacks had the right to demonstrate but added: "The march was stupid — Blacks are already getting a fair deal." Finally, Paul (27) said: "Marching through a white-dominated area was just asking for trouble. People can't get out of this estate, but all the Blacks are coming in getting the lovely houses." Significantly, not one of these interviewees condemned the BNP. And this, as said before, is in a hostle paper. Couldn't they find anyone who opposed us?

WHITES ASSEMBLE FOR COUNTER-DEMO
Note local support on balconies

The very anti-BNP South London Press ran much the same sort of story, except that there were more local views about the protected the BNP (it didn't need protection!) — and how he and his friends were going to march again. Later, however,

LETTERS OF SUPPORT

Of course, as might be expected, the race traitors sitting on the local council roundly condemned the BNP. Much more illuminating, however, were the correspondence columns of the two local papers during the following weeks, as letters from the ordinary public poured in full of messages of support for our party. So overwhelmingly sympathetic to us were the letters that we can only guess the actual support we have in the area.

One clue may have been supplied by local MP Simon Hughes, who after the counter-demo started to creep round local pubs sucking up to the local people, obviously scared that they might not vote for him at the next election. Hughes, who has always been a committed multi-racialist and supported the non-white invasion of the constituency, thoroughly deserves to be booted out when polling day comes.

The local voters could not possibly do better than replace Hughes with Steve Tyler, who lives and works in the area and knows intimately the problems the people there face. Certainly, the BNP has stirred the people of Bermondsey to stand up for their neighbourhood and community. But this must not be just a one-off. For it to be permanent, the local people must send Steve Tyler to parliament, so that this country may once again be run by Britons proud of their race and nation, their culture and their heritage — in a land we can once again call our own!

Rally weekend information

AT LAST, we are able to announce the necessary details concerning this year's annual BNP rally. We would have preferred to have notified readers much earlier, but this year we have encountered greater problems than usual in obtaining a venue. Our attendances, year by year, are increasing, and premises which would have sufficed two or three years ago are too small today. We have taken every step possible to ensure that the rally goes ahead without any hitch, despite all sorts of obstacles.

We expect the biggest ever attendance this year, and we know that regions from around the country are organising to send delegations. If any people require accommodation in the London area for the weekend, would they please let us know in advance so that this can be arranged. In this regard we draw everyone's attention to the report below concerning our Brick Lane paper sales the day after the rally (October 20th).

As usual, we shall be staging a BNP social event on the evening after the rally. Try and make it – it should be a great weekend!

Successful NW rally

THE PROGRESS of the British National Party in the North West of England continues. This was shown at a members-only rally held in Rochdale on September 21st, addressed by party leader John Tyndall, at which approximately 70 were in attendance, almost all of them from within the region. For a long time the North Western region was in the doldrums but it began to revive earlier this year after Ken Henderson had been appointed the new Regional Organiser.

The meeting was intended mainly to cover the coming tasks that will become priority in preparation for the next General election, when Ken Henderson will be fighting the Rochdale seat on behalf of the BNP. After a lively opening speech by the Regional Organiser and parliamentary candidate himself, in which he summarised the advances made in the North West during 1991, Mr. Tyndall spoke of the tremendous strides made by the BNP nationwide over the past year or so and welcomed the signs that the North West was now playing its full part in this development. He called for big efforts to raise more money to finance the local campaign, stressed the importance of publicity and canvassing as back-up for the election campaign, calling for the latter to begin as soon as possible. At the same time, he said, this must not be to the detriment of work put in to build up other parts of the region, particularly in the Lancashire 'cotton towns', in which there is a strong nationalist tradition going back to the 1930s.

Congratulations are due to Ken Henderson and his colleagues for their successful efforts to regenerate the BNP in the North West of England over the past few months.

DEFEND BRICK LANE!

REPRODUCED HERE is a cutting from the September issue of* Searchlight magazine. It will be seen that the enemies of the BNP intend mobilising themselves to turn up at the party's traditional paper sales pitch in London's Brick Lane on October 20th, the day after the BNP Annual Rally. The object is obviously to cause trouble. 'Showing disapproval', as Searchlight *puts it, means in effect trying to intimidate BNP paper sellers.

It is probably no accident that this choice of date is connected with the fact that there is a big left-wing anti-poll tax march planned for London on the day previously, October 19th, with the promise of large numbers of the red rabble in London for the weekend.

We urge all those who can possibly get to Brick Lane on the Sunday to do so, including those who do not normally attend paper sales there. Assembly point will be the corner of Brick Lane and Bethnal Green Road. Time: 10.30 a.m.

Help us defend our sales pitch. WE DO NOT INTEND TO BE INTIMATED!

On Sunday 20 October at Brick Lane, East London, where the British National Party and National Front peddle their hate material, anti-fascists will gather to show their disapproval of this activity.

PRICE RISE

WE draw the attention of readers to the fact that, as from this month, the price of a copy of British Nationalist has been increased to 70p. This has been occasioned by rising production costs and could not have been avoided.

Also, last month there was another rise in postal costs. We have had to take this into account in determining our new subscription rates, which can be found at the bottom of this page.

East Midlands active in September

EAST MIDLANDS British National Party held a highly successful meeting in the Newark (Notts.) area on Thursday, September 5th.

The meeting, which was held in the village hall of a tiny farming village five miles out of Newark, was organised by the recently formed Newark Group.

Nearly sixty members and supporters crowded into the hall. Most were local people attending a BNP meeting for the very first time.

The meeting was very ably chaired by Ian Seng of Newark Group and the two speakers were John Peacock (East Midlands Regional Organiser) and HQ representative Richard Edmonds. Both speakers highlighted the appalling riots of the previous days in Oxford, Cardiff and Birmingham (the riots in the North East of England had not yet then materialised).

The collection raised just over £200 and the literature table did a roaring trade.

On Saturday, September 7th, members and supporters of the BNP hit the centre of Peterborough with the party's new election leaflet.

The object of the exercise was to promote the candidature of Richard Heaton, who is the party's prospective parliamentary candidate for the Peterborough seat.

It was a most enjoyable day, and as the BNP group proceeded through the city centre, which tends to be dominated by local reds, it was a sight to behold when the marxists were suddenly awakened from their dreams to the reality of the BNP presence.

Most of the activists present were local people, most of whom were taking part in a BNP activity for the very first time.

Councillors in Lincoln were at it again, condemning the British National Party for holding a perfectly lawful paper sale and leaflet drive in the city on August 31st.

Labour leader Councillor Derek Miller said: "They are taking us back to the last century, not bringing us forward."

Tory leader Councillor Winston Crumblehume also got in his two-penny-worth, saying that he was 100 per-cent against the BNP.

The day was a huge success for the BNP. Members from Newark, Nottingham, Leicester and Peterborough joined Lincoln members. Flying union flags, the team sold many copies of British Nationalist and distributed leaflets.

And thanks to a handful of crazed left-wingers who went running to the police (they call themselves anarchists) the campaign in Lincoln received press coverage in the Lincolnshire Echo.

What we stand for

- The establishment of a government of national unity that will put an end to nationally divisive party warfare; the return of leadership and statesmanship to British affairs.
- An end to immigration and a start to repatriation.
- British withdrawal from the Common Market
- The disbanding of the multi-racial Commonwealth and its replacement by a new Commonwealth of self-governing white states.
- British ownership and control of British industry and resources.
- Protection of British industry by the selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from the British market.
- An end to the financial swindle that causes inflation and slump, and its replacement by a sane and fair financial system that will give the people the purchasing power to buy the goods they produce.
- The subordination of the power of the City to the power of government, and the harnessing of the City to the needs of British industry.
- The regeneration of British farming, with the object of achieving the maximum possible self-sufficiency in food production.
- Rejection of both the poll tax and its substitute, the new 'property tax', and a return to the old rates system, though with fairer rebates allowing for differences in income and in the numbers occupying properties.
- A healthy environment for a healthy people – the protection of our countryside and an end to the architectural disfigurement of our towns and cities.
- Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty.
- A return to traditional methods of education, with stronger discipline in the classroom and the sacking of 'trendy' teachers.
- An alternative defence strategy: withdrawal from NATO, closure of all foreign military and air bases in Britain, the strengthening of Britain's defences and a position of armed neutrality.
- An end to overseas aid and the allocation of the money saved to the financing of repatriation and greater help for the needy at home.
- The crushing of the IRA, the termination of the Anglo-Irish Agreement and firm support for the loyalist majority in Northern Ireland.
- Repeal of the laws permitting homosexuality and abortion (except where the latter is the result of rape or necessary on medical grounds), the wiping out of AIDS and a return to healthy moral values aimed at strengthening the family and community.
